When you want an antiquity or coin in the sale, just bid the estimated price by phone or mail. We will send you the antiquity or coin immediately. No waiting for the closing of the sale. Any and all antiquities or coins not sold before the closing date will be sent to the highest bidder on June 16, 1993.

EXAMPLE—You bid estimate on an item valued at $100.00 and if your bid is the 1st to reach us, you will receive the item immediately. If on the other hand, you bid $75.00 on the same item and are still the high bidder at the end of the sale, the item will be mailed to you on the closing date, June 16, 1993.

If you are ever in the area, stop in and see us! Of course, it's best to call first.

Distaters of Alexander III have always been known but rarely ever written about in any detail. Why this is specifically I couldn't say for sure but several possibilities come forward. Even though distaters are large, they are comparatively dull as all of the known specimens, save two from Sidon, were struck in Macedonia and are of one style with no variations. Distaters usually are found in very fine condition, which for the type is a rather lifeless design in worn condition. Compare this to the many obverse symbols and mints possible in gold staters or tetradrachms and drachms; this could be the reason they have been overlooked. Martin Price, in his wonderful new work on Alexander III and Philip III, barely mentions them in his text, nor does Jenkins in Gulbenkian, or Head in Historia Numorum.

Distaters seem to have been issued, according to Martin Price, from 330-320 BC, more specifically, 325 BC and later. The Macedonian soldiers of Alexander the Great were not paid until they returned from their campaign. These soldiers were paid the magnificent sum of one talent for their heroic labors. To illustrate the value of a "talent" paraphrasing Price, in 336 BC Alexander inherited debts of 500 talents along with the kingdom of Philip II. The treasury of Macedonia could only muster 60 talents. Compare this with a payment of a full talent to each soldier. The distaters were minted most likely as a more convenient way to pay these returning veterans. It also seems likely that since these coins were minted in Macedonia, the treasure captured in the east from the Persian Empire after 331 BC was sent back west to Macedonia for conversion into coinage.

The obverse of the distater bears a head of Athena wearing a Corinthian helmet decorated with a coiled snake and a large plume at the back. Three locks of hair curl back onto the helmet at the ear, while four corkscrew curls fall down the back of the neck. She wears drop earrings and a strand of pearls. On the reverse is a standing winged Nike wearing a chiton holding a ship's mast in her right hand and a wreath in her left. ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΥ is in the right field, and a thunderbolt, kantharos, trident or athlete in the left field. Nike has her right leg visible and turned toward the viewer while she is planted firmly on the ground line.

The new distater which I have discovered depicts a running or less possibly a flying Nike on its reverse. I feel we are dealing with a running rather than a flying Nike because there is the hint of a ground line under her back foot. Her feet, especially her back foot, are balanced on the ball as though she were pushing off that foot and striding forward with her front foot, which is suggested by the way the bottom of her dress clings to the front of that forward foot. The lower part of the chiton gracefully sweeps back from the front top to the bottom between her legs and somewhat electrically flies behind her back leg. Both the back and front legs shown are in high action. This is in great contrast to the normal type also shown where the Nike simply stands, her chiton falling lifelessly to the groundline. Most ancient coins took their motifs from well-known statuary of the time. Otto Morkholm in his book "Early Hellenistic Coinage" alludes to the fact that Alexander may have taken his model for the Nike on his coinage from the gold statues of Nike on the Akropolis being restored during this time. From inscriptions we know how much gold was used on the Nikes but no one knows what they looked like. The image of the Nike on our new distater has a flow and life not unlike what we see in parts of the Elgin marbles. It is within the realm of possibility that the Nike on our coin is a representation of the gold Nikes of the Akropolis, now lost. There is even a greater probability that our distater is patterned after the Nike by Paionios on Mount Olympus which a future article of mine will prove was the basis for the St. Gaudens $20 gold piece. The fact that she is moving forward on her toes with her dress clinging to her legs and flowing out behind her, is a very close parallel to our distater. If it is not taken from the Nike of Olympus, it is after a parallel work of the same period which Wayne Sayles tells me was a style influenced by the artist Lysippos.

The Master Die Theory which I formulated on my own (but wasn't, it seems, alone to come to this conclusion), comes into use here. It states that other than Syracuse and a few other places, Greek cities could not afford or did not want to have a master celator in permanent employment. Therefore, when a city began a new coinage, a master celator would create it with lesser local artists copying the master's work from coins struck from his dies.

Here we have an interesting situation in that the two illustrated coins share a common obverse die. Not only do they share the same obverse die, but the less imaginative reverse die is paired with the more advanced state of the obverse. This is proven by the die break in the eye and the small die break in back of the top hair curl on the helmet. Normally the theory would lead us to the conclusion that the die with the running Victory was the original and the standing Nike the copy, but in this case there is a slightly different conclusion possible. The standing Nike is in unusually high relief. It is probable that both coins are the work of a master celator and that the running Nike is a trial design not accepted by the powers that be at that time. This idea is further bolstered by the fact that the obverse shared by both coins is better in relief and style than other distater obverses I've seen. This remarkable coin, of the running Nike, illustrates that there can always be something unique awaiting us in Greek coinage especially where we don't expect it.

An Important Late Medieval Treasure Hoard of Silverware of 1430 and earlier

This treasure is comprised of two silver beakers, 20 silver fingerings, a silver seal stamp and two bracelets.

The hoard was found during ploughing a field near the site of an old castle about 6 kilometers to the west of Vukovar in Slavonia. With these objects were found some six thousand coins, the bulk of which were Hungarian quarterlings of Sigismund I (1386-1437). Other coins included denars of the Serbian ruler George Brankovich (1427-1456). The coin evidence would indicate a date of deposition about mid-century.

Vukovar lies on the river Drava in the banate of Slavonia, one of the provinces of the kingdom of Hungary. In 1445 the five year old Ladislav V (1445-1457) came to the throne of Hungary. The famous Hungarian general and Governor of Transylvania, Jano Hunyadi who had been one of the leaders of the Crusade of Varna (1443-4), was made regent for the young king.

The Balkans in the middle ages was always unsettled so that it is difficult to put forward any specific disturbance that would account for the hoards burial. One possibility might be with the fact that the Ban or ruler, of Slavonia, Matko Talovac, died in 1445 and Frederick and Ulrich, Counts of Celje, marched into Slavonia claiming the title of Ban. In the fighting that ensued Matko's brother was killed. Although Hunyadi eventually sent an army against the two counts, he had many other affairs claiming his attention and finally recognized Frederick of Celje as Ban of Slavonia.
